I am a native California artist working in a variety of mediums from acrylic on wood panel and canvas to digital renderings and typography. My earliest memory of knowing I wanted to make art was after I received a set of high quality felt tip markers as a Christmas gift. The back of the package had a painting by Monet - who I was not familiar with at the time – and after seeing the image I thought that someone rendered that painting with markers. Which led me to believe if someone else did that then I could too. What ambition for an eight year old!

My work ranges from abstract landscapes to modern design, typography and a clear activist influence to some of my work appealing to feminists and outspoken progressives everywhere. I believe in the democracy of art; that art belongs to everyone and create works that fall into a variety of prices making it available to a range of budgets and buyers. My art is an adventure. I am constantly trying out new styles and techniques.

This piece inspired by American artist, Joan Brown.
